Questions and Readings for the Final Examination (2020)

I. English Linguistics

The brief remarks that follow might help you interpret the questions and better understand what we expect you to do and what we do not. Each title, e.g. “Natural language and linguistic theory,” is followed by an annotation, which clarifies what questions and issues may be discussed under that title. We do not expect you to address each such question. Instead, we encourage you to be selective and discuss some of the questions under a title in some depth rather than make a few cursory remarks about each.

1. Natural language and linguistic theory

Naïve beliefs about language and linguistics. What is language? What is a language? Goals of linguistic theory. Criticism of prescriptive approaches to language and grammar. Natural language vs. animal communication systems. Competence vs. performance. Mental grammars and theories of mental grammars. The structure of competence and the structure of grammars. The creative aspect of language use and its implications for a theory of competence. FL/UG and the logical problem of language acquisition. Adequacy conditions on grammars.

2. Phonological theory and the phonological structure of English and Hungarian

The task and goals of phonological theory, its place in (a) grammar. Phonology vs. phonetics. Segmental and suprasegmental phonology. The phoneme inventory of English. Phonological differences between English and Hungarian.

3. Goals and tasks of syntactic theory and the structure of English sentences

The place of syntax in grammar. The goals and tasks of syntactic theory. Constituent structure and structural relations. Identifying sentence constituents: “constituency tests” and assumptions that underlie them. Determining the category of constituents. Traditional syntax vs. generative transformational grammar. The “major English clause types” of traditional grammar. The complementation and subcategories of verbs. Contrasts expressed in the verb phrase/sentence (tense, aspect, mood). The structure of non-monoclausal sentences. Clausal coordination and subordination. Finite and nonfinite clauses as constituents.

4. The structure, meaning and communicative function of linguistic expressions

Word meaning and sentence meaning. The compositionality principle. The content of linguistic communication: sentence meaning versus utterance meaning. The context of utterance interpretation. Inference in utterance interpretation. Criticism of the naïve assumption of a biunique relation between structural sentence types and discourse functions. One-to-many and many-to-one correspondence between structural sentence types and discourse functions. Declaratives and interrogatives as indirect directives.

II. British and American Civilisation and History

II.1. British Civilisation, History and Cultural History

In discussing the following topics, you are expected to synthesize the relevant information and ideas from your studies in British Civilisation, the History of Great Britain, and the Cultural History of Britain. The subtopics in parenthesis are merely an indication as to what you should consider while approaching the main topic; under no circumstances should they be discussed in isolation.

1. Country, geography, people and political life: Unbalanced Union: Discuss England's dominance of Britain and Ireland throughout history; does the Union have a future? (settlement; invasions; ethnic groups; the North–South divide; sectarianism; national parties: Plaid Cymru, Sinn Fein /DUP, SNP; Devolution)

2. The Monarchy, government and parliamentary system: The cradle of Democracy: Outline the historical roots and origins of today's major political institutions (the Monarchy; the source of parliamentary traditions; the origins of the House of Lords and its role today; the Tudors, their legitimising myth and their enduring legacy; the electoral system; the fight for the franchise)

3. The law: A very English constitution: Why does Britain not have a written constitution? (an uncodified constitution; sources of the constitution; Henry II, English Common Law; statute law; foundation documents: the Magna Carta, Provisions of Oxford, Petition of Rights, Bill of Rights, Act of Settlement; 20th-century Acts of Parliament; the future?)

4. Society, education and welfare: Discuss the origins of the education and welfare systems in the UK (historical overview of the major educational institutions; the current education system; the formation of the current welfare system; the role of the church; the Poor Law; Industrial Revolution; the Liberal government of the 20th century; the Beveridge report, the Welfare State vs. Thatcherism; dismantling welfare; privatising education)

5. International relations and economy: The 'ruler of the waves': Why a Commonwealth of Nations? (the story of the British Empire; the development of overseas trade; Henry VIII and the navy; Elizabeth I; American War of Independence; the "Second" Empire; the Jewel in the Crown; scramble for Africa; Chinese Opium Wars; penal colonies; World Wars; break up; legacy)

6. Religion: Discuss the story of Christianity and its art in Britain (the Christianisation of Britain; forms and styles of medieval Church Art with examples; the Reformation; John Wycliffe and the Lollards; Henry VIII and the Church of England; Roman Catholicism; Non-Conformism; other religions; religious map of the UK today)

II.2. American Civilization and History

7. Discuss the concept of the American Dream and its manifestations in American high and low culture.

8. Retrace the development of multicultural America with special emphasis on the main aspects of the color multiculturalism, that is, the main ethnic and racial groups.

- 9. Discuss the process of the formation of the American colonies.
- 10. Discuss the historical development of the United States between 1775 and 1865.
- 11. Discuss the formation and main aspects of the Constitution of the United States.
- 12. Discuss the historical development of the United States between 1917 and 1945.

III. British and American Literature

Preambulum

The comprehensive examination concluding your literary studies is not another end-of-the-semester exam (“kollokvium”). The subjects below demand much broader literary intelligence: integrative skills are needed in handling lecture and seminar materials as well as related required readings.

(A) English Studies Specialization
